JASPER PARK LODGE

In the heart of the Canadian Rockies

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

JASPER PARK LODGE

THE ATHABASKA VALLEY

HE Athabaska Valley lies sequestered amid the ranges of the Canadian Rockies. Its sunny basin is to that riotous upheaval of mighty cliffs what an oasis is to the parched sands of a desert,—a delightful place in which to rest. Five successive ranges of mountains guard the solitudes against intrusions from the open spaces of the prairies. Westward, the snow peaks of the Rockies' highest range perform their magic with the warm moisture-laden breezes of the Kuro Siwo. Though sentinelled by eternal guardians that lift their heads above the clouds, the valley supplements the primitive grandeur of the mountains with pervading calm. Its amazingly low altitude of 3,450 feet enables tourists to banish whatever fears may arise from abnormal blood pressure. Though clouds cling to the neighboring peaks, the clear transparent atmosphere of the valley is one of Jasper's major assets. The Canadian Government has preserved 4,400 square miles of this scenic region for posterity, and all wild creatures find a refuge therein. The Canadian National Railways has added to the efforts of the Canadian National Parks Division, and has made of this, the largest National park in America, a rendezvous for tourists, where fugitives "from the madding crowd's ignoble strife" find retreat in nature's sanctuary.

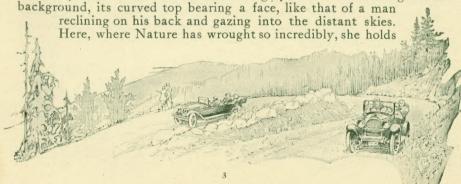

What a marvellous valley the Athabaska is! You must not think that you are the first to discover its grandeur. To be sure, this treasure of scenic splendor remained barred to the tourist until the railway penetrated those fortressed barricades. Even so, the records of sturdy pioneers disclose the fact that others preceded you in these ecstatic flights of admiration. The Athabaska Valley, down which meanders with unrestrained freedom the Athabaska River, has been nature's rendezvous for all who trail the northern mountains since before the arrival of the first heralds of civilization, more than a century ago. Still, Nature in her primeval grandeur remains untamed.

First glimpse of the Lodge

One easily gains the impression that the Athabaska Valley is surrounded on all sides by lofty mountains. Yonder to the north, the apex of Pyramid Mountain pierces the fleecy clouds, its ore-colored sides of reddish brown interspersed with veins of amber and gold. A short distance eastward, the Palisades tower threateningly above the Snaring River, their naked embattled cliffs resembling impregnable defence works. Indeed, Nature has wrought marvellously to preserve the solitudes of the valley. Westward, the Whistlers rear their forested slopes, variegated as the skies above and changeable as the cycle of seasons. In the south, Edith Cavell lifts her head of unsoiled whiteness and serenely dominates the valley. Roche Bonhomme holds its greyish-brown dome high in the high the face of the "Upward Look," thus symbolizing the secret she thrusts into the souls of men who lift their eyes to the eternal hills.

Dashing torrents cascade down the mountains' sides filling the valley with subdued music. Portal Creek and the Astoria River hurtle over their boulder-strewn courses with frolicking swiftness. The Snaring and Miette Rivers flow calmly where they pour their silt-laden waters into the Athabaska, but back on the mountains' sides their angry waters rage and swirl violently. Maligne River, as beautiful as the name sounds and as wicked, rages furiously through a scenic gorge of rare charm to mingle its waters with those of the subterranean channel from Medicine charming seclusion. Patricia and Pyramid lakes lie at the base of Pyramid Mountain, gracing themselves by reflecting the variegated colors of their guardian's unique walls. Trefoil, Annette and Edith lakes skirt the Athabaska under the shadow of Signal Mountain. Lac Beauvert, in shape like a horse-shoe, is the tourists' constant delight.

The Athabaska is a valley of shades and colors. Clouds are ever forming fleecy wreaths, drawn plumes, or flowing scarfs about the cold white peaks. Breaking their invisible moorings about one or other of the summits, they drift in uncertain course across the valley, while marching shadows play over the verdant slopes. At sunrise, the peaks are touched with fiery splendor above the valley still wrapped in night. As the sun begins its westering, shadows steal down from the mountains, and the snowy spires blaze like signal fires; then, when the alpen glow fades, twilight lingers far into the night. The tourist never forgets twilight at Jasper.

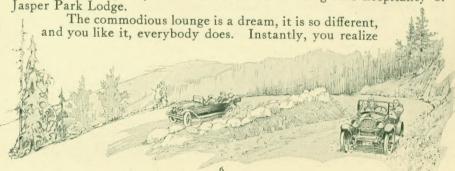

Colourful Pyramid Mountain

JASPER PARK LODGE

HE motor speeding over the three mile drive to Jasper Park Lodge affords ample time for the newly arriving tourist to sense the exhilaration of the crisp morning air. You do not forget the stimulating breath of those white peaks. If, perchance, you arrive in the evening, your first glimpse of the Lodge will be a real delight. The gleaming lights, reflected in Lac Beauvert's placid waters and piercing the night's wooded blackness, cast a rare enchantment. It remains only for a courteous reception, resembling a long-expected homecoming, the porter's compelling announcement "move your watch back one hour" and you give yourself in abandon to the genial hospitality of Jasper Park Lodge.

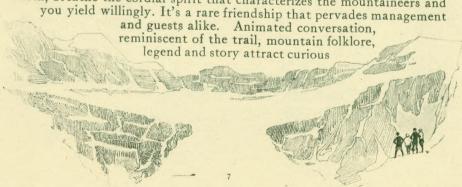

White-turbaned Mount Edith Cavell

that it is built of smooth reddish logs, and so artistic; it belongs to its alpine setting. The luxurious furnishings are attractive; but, it is the mammoth New England fireplace, with logs blazing merrily and carelessly casting their cheer to the farthest corners, that fascinates you. The walls are adorned with hunters' trophies, reminding you that the haunts of bear, cariboo, sheep and goat are near. You do not miss the huge beaver cut log in which you mail your letters. Instinctively, the great heart-shaped grille through which the orchestra-music floods the dining room tells you that Jasper's secrets have access by way of the heart.

Somehow, the genial tourists, congregated here from the ends of the earth, breathe the cordial spirit that characterizes the mountaineers and groups and afford unusual merriment. Then, one of the charming hostesses graciously intrudes and escorts willing guests to the bridge tables or to the recreation hall where dancing is in full swing. Good-will pervades through the evening at Jasper Park Lodge. Afternoon tea is served on the spacious verandahs.

Though you have registered at the desk, a succession of events has withheld you from your bungalow. But now you must go. A bell-boy escorts you down a long garden walk between rows of rustic bungalows to the one which is yours, at least while you remain. Inside the bungalow you are thrilled, for it contains four bedrooms, just enough for your party. There you are, all together, under one roof, and no strangers to molest you,—just like home. There is a spacious waiting-room, writing table or desk, bath with hot and cold water, electric lights, a verandah outside, in fact everything you desire. You might have had any of the thirty-seven bungalows, ranging in size from one suite to twelve rooms, but the clerk at the desk knew this one would suit you and your party best. Experience has taught him that tourists place a high value on privacy of this kind. Before retiring, you step out on the verandah. What a night it is! The towering firs intensify the darkness, yet there is a shimmer on Lac Beauvert. The stars fill the heavens with a million brilliants, but the soul you say "Good night."

Next morning, you have kept your resolve to witness sunrise at Jasper, and you would not have missed its lavish splendor. The deer among the spruce on the peninsula below the bungalows was a surprise. You had not expected to see beaver plying a rapid course in the lake though you had heard much of the bears. The turquoise waters of Lac Beauvert displayed the reflected beauty of the mountains so perfectly, you were amazed. You appreciate Conan Doyle's feelings when he visited Jasper Park Lodge: "In front of me is the most remarkable lake of any I know, and I have a good many on my visiting-list. Its colours are never the same from hour to hour—emerald-green, copper-green, lapis-lazuli blue, pure olive, and then suddenly a touch of pink which turns it all into one huge opal."

Daylight enabled you to see Jasper Park Lodge.
You discovered that it actually constitutes a miniature village of rustic bungalows, artistically arranged

most captivating lake

you ever saw. The same architecture prevails throughout, and the materials used are the gift of the valley, logs from the forests and boulders from the glacial-swept basin. Of course the large building in the center is the main attraction. There your meals are served in the commodious dining room, which affords accommodation for 575 guests, and you find all the conveniences and comforts of a modern city hotel; card rooms, barbershop, ladies' retiring lounge with manicure and hair-dressing parlors, shower baths, ticket and telegraph offices, information bureau, nothing is missing. The spacious verandah grips you with an obsession to spend the day in its genial atmosphere and revel in the Alpine grandeur upon which it fronts.

Early, the Lodge is enlivened, trail riders, motorists, hikers, dressed in suitable apparel, scurry hither and thither to keep appointments for an early start. Golfers, tennis players and those who enjoy bathing and canoeing are busy with the day's schedule. Tourists with cameras are enthused over the prospect of a perfect day, while others elect the quiet of those brooding verandahs and a chance to think under the magic spell of nature's sublime achievements.

On the shore of Lac Beauvert and but a step from the Lodge, lies the new and inviting swimming pool, with its crystal clear water, filtered, heated and constantly changing. Adjacent also are the excellent tennis courts where many pleasant hours may be spent. "En tout cas" top dressing makes them the equal of the finest championship courts.

Getting acquainted

GLACIER OF THE ANGELS (Mt. Edith Cavell) DRIVE

HAT wonder!" exclaimed a tourist as the commodious motor sped noiselessly along the perfect roadway of the Glacier of the Angels Drive, its smooth surface resembling a boulevard pavement.

Leaving Jasper Park Lodge, it follows a slender avenue through firs and spruce, skirting the shores of Lac Beauvert where beaver may be seen if one chances by in the early morning or late evening. After crossing the Athabaska River, one may perchance see, up the dusty trail to the left, black or brown bears or, as the Twin Lakes are passed, Bruin may be glimpsed enjoying his daily dip.

The drive crosses the Miette River where it empties into the Athabaska River and continues up the Athabaska

The view from the first tee

Valley, gradually ascending Whistlers and Marmot Mountains. Meanwhile, it bridges several torrents that come frolicking down from the higher altitudes in right good spirit. Portal Creek drains Circus Valley and guides the trail-rider through The Portal on his way to the Tonquin Valley where the Ramparts lift their embattled bulwarks defiantly. The Ramparts form the backbone of the Rockies and keep watch over the superb Amethyst Lakes.

After crossing the Miette, the ascending drive affords an increasing view of the Athabaska Valley attaining its zenith so high above the Astoria that the river below appears like a tiny rill. The broad forested basin of the valley spreads to amazing proportions. Down its center, the Athabaska resembles a silver cord glistening in the sunlight. Across the valley, the Maligne Mountains hold their naked grey forms defiantly erect. Tekarra, Amber, Curator and Antler Mountains are in the foreground while an infinite variety of mountains display themselves in the background of this vast pageantry of Alpine scenery.

Where the Drive turns abruptly on the mountain's brow, the chauffeur courteously stops the motor and you step out to snap the "hoodoos," freakish formations of irregular upright pillars, each capped with a boulder, and left standing by the receding clay bank. Across the valley, on the steep incline you may see mountain goats, unless you are there at midday when the goats recline in sheltered clefts.

At the end of the Drive, the speedometer registers some eighteen miles and you have ascended 2,300 feet to an altitude of 5,770 feet.

You think you have climbed considerably higher. Cavell Lake lies kenneled at the base of Mt. Sorrow, lifting its sombre cliffs perpendicularly erect. A short walk over the boulder-strewn moraine and you may climb up the slippery sides of Cavell Glacier.

The distinguished visitors who opened the Course

There, immediately in front, stands the superb mountain itself. Edith Cavell, with an altitude of 11,033 feet, serenely dominates the entire setting, its white turbaned head glistening in the sun. In the cirque where Cavell Mountain touches shoulders with Mount Sorrow, the two outstretched wings of Glacier of the Angels spread themselves. Midway, where the wings meet, the glacier cascades 500 feet over the precipice, forming the phantom creature's body. Thence, the glacier expands in larger proportions, crowding a mile down the valley. Its surface is strewn with pieces of rock from the cliffs above and yawning crevasses display their transparent green sides.

Retrospect from the sixth green

The return journey follows the same route, back to the Lodge. With the changing light new beauties are discovered, and glimpses of this, one of the finest of the continent's scenic drives, are "fixed" sharply to remain as lifelong memories.

The Glacier of the Angels Drive is but one of the motor roads that thread the valley, and, beautiful as it is, it affords only a foretaste of the magnificence lying in every direction about Jasper Park Lodge. A brief description of other drives in the Park will be found under heading "What to do at Jasper." (Pages 26-31.)

But a step from the Lodge is the Pool and Boathouse

GOLF AMID THE ROCKIES

HE most fascinating game of golf I have ever played", exclaimed a tourist as his ball dropped into the cup on the "home" green. "These mountains are sublime, the air gives you ginger and there is something to look at every minute," he added.

As one stands on the first tee, he instantly realizes that the course is lifted out of comparison with others by the inspiring magnificence of its setting. The play follows a circuitous route in a great amphitheatre surrounded with snow-capped mountains. As the golfer plays down the fairway of each hole, he looks toward one or other of those mighty mountains which raise their peaks into the upper clear cold atmosphere enjoyed on the Course. Many a good player who has been breathing the air of these high altitudes, when his eyes behold that "face" on the dome of Roche Bonhomme, has shared kindred thoughts with the poet of the Psalms who lifted his eyes to the hills.

Keen golfers will be delighted to discover a course which measures up to the demands of the experienced expert. Laid down in a place where he would naturally suppose it would be impossible to have a great extent of golfing terrain, they will be surprised to discover that work started in 1924 has produced an eighteen hole course in excellent condition for play in 1926. Fortunately, the underlying strata of the river basin where the course is built provides a gravel subsoil without clay. Thus, the prospects for a good golfing turf are excellent. The course is notable for the variety of physical features embraced by the different holes. There are very pleasing dips and slopes, and two particularly attractive valley holes. Three of the "one-shotters" have striking characteristics.

Fairways lie in avenues of trees. One might expect these trees to be all of one kind, but they are not. The Douglas spruce are the most stately and do more than any others to impress firmly upon your mind that only two years ago their lofty tops swayed in undisturbed sovereignty over the forest where now you putt your ball on the smoothly carpeted greens. The young jack-pine and the poplar with its "aspen leaf aquiver" skirt the boundary-line and clumps have been preserved in well chosen places. There are also water holes, involving carries and parallel shots where the course lies along the shore of Lac Beauvert, and where the reflections from the clear green waters of this mountain lake are beyond imagination.

Water for the turf on the fairways and greens comes by gravity from Signal Mountain, 300 feet above the course so that ample pressure is obtained. It is fortunate that water supply of this nature is accessible for there are seasons in the year when the rainfall is not very heavy.

But it is a great asset of the golfing interests at Jasper that the rainfall is infrequent and throughout the summer season the sun shines so much of the time.

The long light evenings at Jasper offer unique fascination to the golfer who hesitates

, In perfect harmony with Nature to "call it a day." After the sun has faded in crimson glory beyond the skyline of the Miette Range, the twilight lingers longer than in any other place I have been. It was in such a setting of ethereal splendor that I played my last game of golf on the course at Jasper. We began to play at 9.11 in the evening and continued until 10.16 Standard time.

September in Jasper is destined to become famous to the golfer. It may rival Apple Blossom Time in Normandy as a phrase to indicate the last word in beauty of surroundings. Jasper is destined to be one of the great golfing resorts of the world. It cannot be surpassed, and it is doubtful if circumstances elsewhere ever combine so agreeably as to permit of the Jasper golf course being equalled in beauty of surroundings or character of golfing terrain.
